Millennials hit hardest by layoffs

SURVEY

Those 18-34 losing jobs at a greater rate than boomers

Kevin Maimann
Metro | Edmonton

Boomers aren't feeling the bust in Alberta the way younger generations are.

The Alberta Treasury Branch Investor Beat Survey found that, in the last quarter, of those who said the economic downturn had an impact on them, 39 per cent of millennials (age 18-34) and 30 per cent of Gen Xers (35-54) lost their jobs — compared to 19 per cent of boomers (age 54 and up) — in the last quarter.

“From a job-loss standpoint, millennials have been more impacted by the decline in the price of oil than boomers,” said ATB Investor Services president Chris Turchansky.

Overall, job losses rose one per cent over the last survey. Turchansky expects the losses to keep rising for another quarter before they level off.

He said while boomers have not been hit as hard by layoffs, they have been feeling salary freezes and the decreasing value of real-estate investments.

“They’re definitely feeling it; they’re just feeling it in a different way,” Turchansky said.

Many Albertans are abandoning long-term savings strategies, and an increasing number of people appear to be cutting back on personal spending.

The survey polled 1,007 Albertans from April 11-18.

Judge to apologize for remarks

A Federal Court judge who asked a sexual assault complainant why she couldn't keep her knees together plans to apologize for his remarks at a public hearing.

A Canadian Judicial Council inquiry scheduled for September is to determine whether Justice Robin Camp, who made the comments in 2014 as a provincial court judge in Calgary, should be removed from his job.

A notice of response outlines Camp's position: "Justice Camp wants to continue serving as a judge," it says. THE CANADIAN PRESS

INVESTIGATION

Woman charged with manslaughter

Edmonton police have charged a woman with manslaughter in relation to a March 18, 2015 assault.

That day, officers found 47-year-old Warren Todd McLeod unconscious in an apartment near 100 Avenue and 114 Street. Police say Joelle Marie Reich, 47, assaulted him two days before they were called. He was taken to hospital and succumbed to his injuries almost a year later.

The medical examiner determined he died from complications of blunt force head injuries.

On Wednesday, Reich was charged with manslaughter, causing death by criminal negligence, and failing to provide necessities of life. THE CANADIAN PRESS

ACTS OF NATURE

Storm chasers kept busy with tornado alerts

Samantha Power
For Metro | Edmonton

Storm chasers across Alberta had a different type of excitement this Canada Day weekend. With severe thunderstorm warnings and tornado alerts over the three days, storm chasers had many opportunities to capture rare photos.

"It was definitely busier than usual," said Chris Ratzlaff a storm chaser out of Calgary. "We started to have four possible tornadoes in four days. That's pretty impressive."

Tornado alerts were issued for Ponoka County, Mountain View, Foothills, Flagstaff, Newell and Vulcan throughout the weekend. Severe weather alerts rolled in regularly on the Alberta Emergency alert Twitter feed and Environment Canada.

With that kind of action, picking out the storms to follow can be difficult.

"A lot of forecasting goes into choosing where to go," says Ratzlaff.

The storm-chasing community tends to hang out in central Alberta around Red Deer as it gives a good vantage point to move to storms around the province.

Friday was most exciting for Ratzlaff, who prefers to chase super cell tornadoes, characterized by a deep, rotating updraft. Land spouts, by comparison, are spinning columns of air that can form out of nearly any cloud type.

Technology has made storm tracking much easier than portrayed in the movie Twister. Cars no longer need their own weather tracking stations, though some still use it.

Ratzlaff largely relies on weather-tracking apps and information made available through Environment Canada.

He operates in connection with Prairie Storm Chasers, founded by Braydon Morrisseau and Nevin Demilliano. The team members post their photos to Twitter.

The team also works to educate and caution people on storm chasing. They try to ensure recklessness is not a stereotype lived out in the storm-chasing community here in Alberta.

"We promote chasing in a way that is reasonable without being reckless," says Ratzlaff.

Shelter changing

ANIMAL WELFARE

Cats at Humane Society part of pilot program

Alex Boyd
Metro | Edmonton

The Edmonton Humane Society is rolling out some big changes to the way they house and adopt out their feline charges.

"It's a fundamental shift in how shelter medicine and operations are performed and it'll save cat lives, we've seen the data," said shelter CEO Miranda Jordan-Smith.

Both Edmonton and Calgary have been chosen as the first pilot projects in western Canada for Capacity for Care, a new program gaining steam out east that rethinks how to house cats in shelters.

A big part of it is giving them each a bigger space, and separating their eating and litter spaces. The program also recommends switching to scheduled intake hours, fast-tracking the adoption process, and creating special feral cat procedures.

The central theme, Jordan-Smith said, is cutting down on cat overpopulation.

"I think historically in shelters, cats were afforded a certain amount of space, but we still have this perpetual issue where from May to October we're inundated with cats."

According to numbers from the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies, the handful of shelters in eastern Canada that have implemented the protocol have had success, seeing between a 40 and 87 per cent decrease in sickness.

The length of stay went down 29 per cent in PEI and 51 per cent Kitchener-Waterloo, and euthanasia also dropped in a couple of shelters.

"It has to be a multi-pronged approach, we have to educate the public on spay and neutering, it does require a cultural shift, but it also requires a change in the way we do things," Jordan-Smith said.

Marshall McLuhan preached that the "medium was the message" and for the next week anyone will be able to take their own impressions from his historic family home.

The doors are open at the author and intellectual's historic home in Highlands this week. The micro museum celebrates McLuhan and his effect on the media world.

"He's a pretty important thinker from Edmonton," says Chelsea Boos, programming coordinator with Arts Habitat Edmonton, which now runs the space. "He was forecasting the kinds of things that we're dealing with before anyone else had thought to look at T.V. or media at all."

Arts Habitat took over the space in 2013, after city council helped fund the purchases and protected the home as a heritage property.

The house has been open on a limited basis since January but will be much more available for the rest of this week. Stuart McKay, the family genealogist, provides the family history in the main floor of the home which showcases historical family portraits and McLuhan's library of works, as well as a TV wall installation.

The house also provides arts residency space through the Tennis Club, an artist collective. After six months of operations Boos is most proud of getting this space up and running.

"Having them here as another energy that adds to the space," says Boos. "It works conceptually really well with the neighbourhood."

Boos is hoping the community connection will continue to grow as the McLuhan House settles more into the neighbourhood.

"I'd like for it to become a more organic process," says Boos.

INFRASTRUCTURE

Airport authority unsure on sale

Ryan Tumilty
Metro | Edmonton

The prospect of a sale of the Edmonton International Airport is not something the airport authority has even started to wrap its head around.

Metro first reported on Monday that the federal government is considering the sale of several major airports in a bid to raise money for other infrastructure projects.

The sale could take the airports away from the community focused corporations that currently manage most airports in the country and put them in the hands of for-profit companies.

Currently, the federal government leases the land to airports. In the case of Edmonton, the airport authority paid approximately $18 million to the government in 2015.

Traci Bednard, spokesperson for the authority, said that number ranges depending on the airport's overall revenues including passenger fees.

She said with the news so fresh, the authority doesn't have an opinion one way or the other.

"We don't have a position on privatization. That is a hugely complex issue, so our board and management would have to take time to review that," she said.

Adam Sweet, with the Edmonton Economic Development

Corporation, said the airport has helped small and large businesses grow in the city and worked hard to keep trade routes and direct flights going. "Economic development is a team sport and Edmonton International Airport is a star player on that team," he said.

He said given their tremendous support, regardless of what happens with the airport EEDC will be working with them.

"We have seen what that strong relationship can lead to in terms of the positive outcomes and we don't see any situation that would change that."

Police floats ban 'stupid': Union

DEMANDS

Black Lives Matter held a sit-in during Pride Parade

Members of the Toronto police force say they're offended that Pride organizers agreed to a list of demands set out by Black Lives Matter during Sunday's parade.

The list includes nine demands that range from banning police floats in future parades to increasing funding for spaces for racialized communities.

Janaya Khan, co-founder of Black Lives Matter Toronto, said the group took the position they were given in the parade as an opportunity to open up a conversation about how to make Pride more inclusive for marginalized groups.

Members of the group held a sit-in part way through the city's 36th annual Pride Parade, stopping it from moving forward for about a half hour.

It resumed when Pride's executive director, Mathieu Chantelois, signed the list of demands.

The president for the union representing the city's police officers said he's outraged that Pride would accept the demands.

Mike McCormack said that police officers have been supporters of Pride for years, and that it's "stupid" to try and exclude them.

"This is about the Pride parade, this is not about Black Lives Matter," he said in an interview Monday.

"We have been supporting this parade for years, long before politicians and other people. To suggest that police should be removed and not have a float or booths or be allowed in Pride to begin with."

And Khan noted that this sort of political action isn't unprecedented at Pride parades.

"Change is uncomfortable. Twenty years ago, you had the first Dyke March. There was a lot of negative publicity, there was a lot of pushback."

But while Pride Toronto's executive director signed the document during Sunday's parade, organizers are now saying that they were really just committing to "having a conversation" about the list.

"There's a number of (the requests) that are quite reason-

"We have been supporting this parade for years, long before politicians and other people. Mike McCormack the community space, that's complete and utter nonsense."

He suggested that Black Lives Matter shouldn't be allowed to co-opt another group's event. Khan took issue with that stance.

"I can't co-opt what is mine," said Khan, who is part of the LG-BTQ community, adding: "It was never community consensus that police floats should be a part of able, in terms of how we engage with the black, queer community," said Alicia Hall, a co-chair of Pride's board of directors. And the rest of them, she said, will be discussed — including the role of police.

But Khan said that while some of the items on the list are negotiable, the ban on police floats is not. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Federal agency sorry for nixing kids' lemonade stand

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

After a sour online response, the National Capital Commission has apologized for shutting down a children's lemonade stand over the weekend.

Seven-year-old Eliza Andrews and her five-year-old sister Adela had a morning of sweet sales when they set up near their house along Colonel By Drive Sunday morning.

The stretch of road is closed to motorists on Sundays and opened to pedestrians and cyclists.

After about two hours of sales they were promptly shut down by an NCC officer because they

"We understood that it was NCC property," said father Kurtis Andrews, who built the lemonade stand to teach his daughters some real world business skills. "But we figured a kids' lemonade stand wouldn't raise a bunch of fuss, and no one would probably make a big deal about it."

On Monday morning the girls and their dad were invited to NCC headquarters to talk about bringing the lemonade stand back — with the proper documentation.

"They gave us the royal treatment," said Andrews. "We put in an application for a permit, and it sounds like they'll be expediting whatever process is required so we can set up next Sunday."

The NCC released a statement Monday morning, apologizing to the family and saying that it reviewed the situation with the conservation officer on duty.

CRIME

Child exploitation an 'epidemic'

Canadian police lack the resources to keep pace with the burgeoning threat to children from online sexual predators, federal officials have warned the public safety minister.

An internal briefing note to Ralph Goodale says digital child pornography poses increasing challenges for criminal justice agencies.

The problem is fuelled by the growth of technology allowing online anonymity, new legal hurdles for police and easier travel to places where children can be abused and photographed, the note says.

The Canadian Press obtained a copy of the February memo under the Access to Information Act. It said although data is limited, some believe online child sexual exploitation has reached "a level of epidemic proportions."

BANGLADESH

Officials question hostages

Some of the hostages rescued from the weekend attack on an upscale restaurant in Bangladesh's capital were questioned Monday by investigators searching for clues about the possible masterminds behind the gruesome attack that left 28 dead, including many foreigners.

Authorities were still holding five of the 13 hostages rescued when commandos stormed the restaurant in Dhaka's diplomatic zone Saturday morning, killing six of the attackers and capturing one, according to officials.

Bangladesh police chief A.K.M. Shahidul Haque said authorities would be interrogating two men, including a suspected militant, who were detained during Saturday's operation. He would not say whether either had been among those counted as hostages, only that they were being treated in a hospital for unspecified injuries.

A second official said the five former hostages still being held included a Canadian citizen of Bangladeshi origin and a Bangladesh-born British citizen.

Global Affairs Canada, the government department which manages Canada's diplomatic and consular relations, and consular officials at the High Commission of Canada in Dhaka said they had not received any reports of a Canadian citizen being detained.

The brutality of the attack has stunned the traditionally moderate Muslim nation and raised global concerns about whether it can cope with increasingly strident Islamist militants.

Death toll climbs in Iraq

TERRORISM

Officials aim to tighten security measures

As the death toll from the weekend truck bombing in Baghdad climbed to 157, Iraq's embattled prime minister ordered new security measures, including abandoning the use of bomb-detection wands that U.S. experts pronounced worthless years ago.

But security forces were still using the devices Monday evening, as a string of smaller bombings in the capital killed 16 people and wounded dozens more.

Sunday's suicide attack by Daesh was the single deadliest bombing to hit Baghdad in more than a decade of war and insurgency.

Also Monday, five convicted terrorists were executed in Baghdad, the Ministry of Justice said in an announcement that appeared aimed at restoring faith in Iraq's security forces in the wake of the devastating attack.

Firefighters and medical teams were still uncovering bodies from the city's Karada neighbourhood Monday morning. Officials said a dozen people were missing and at least 60 of the dead were women and children. At least 190 people were wounded.

The blast struck after midnight when the neighbourhood was bustling with people breaking their daylight fast during the Muslim holy month of Ramadan. The attack demonstrated Daesh's ability to strike the capital despite a string of defeats on the battlefield, including the loss of Fallujah just over a week ago.

With public anger mounting, Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi ordered new security measures Sunday evening, including increased aerial scanning and intelligence-gathering in the capital and the installation of X-ray systems at the entrances of provinces.

He also ordered security forces to stop using a handheld electronic device that was widely sold as a bomb detector but has been repeatedly branded bogus by technical experts. And he ordered the reopening of an investigation into the purchase of the ADE 651s, which cost the Iraqi government tens of thousands of dollars each.

In 2010, British authorities arrested the director of the British manufacturer, ATSC Ltd., on fraud charges, prompting Iraqis to open their own investigation. Iraqi authorities made some arrests, but the device remained in use.

On Monday evening, Associated Press reporters saw a number of the devices still being used at checkpoints around the capital as another round of blasts erupted. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Swap app shakes up transfers

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

TransferWise allows users to send money to 60 countries

Kristo Käärman and Taavet Hinrikus built a billion-dollar business out of their common spendthrift's conundrum.

Käärman was paid in pounds at his job in London, but needed euros to pay off his student loans in Estonia. Countrymate Hinrikus was getting paid in euros through a bank account back home, but living in London and spending pounds.

Both were frustrated with how much money they were losing to their banks when transferring money to and from their own accounts.

So they decided to invent a new system. The two partnered to create TransferWise, a peer-to-peer foreign-exchange swap system that changes the way consumers in 60 countries send money abroad.

"I realized the way it works is the bank just uses a different exchange rate," Käärman said in an interview ahead of TransferWise's Canadian launch in April. "It's a very sneaky trick by the banks to fool you into thinking there's a fixed rate."

Since its founding in 2011, TransferWise has become a "unicorn" — a startup worth more than $1 billion — and attracted investors including Sir Richard Branson and PayPal founder Peter Thiel. It has been named Apple's "most innovative" app.

The service entered the Canadian market this spring, enabling users to send Canadian dollars to any of the 60 countries and 35 currencies on TransferWise's platform.

The company believes Canada is a market ripe for disruption, with more than three million Canadians living abroad and seven million people here who were born overseas. It estimates that Canadians are paying more than $1 billion in fees to transfer about $30 billion abroad every year.

TransferWise charges 1.2 per cent to exchange money — about 80 per cent less than Canadian banks.

TransferWise's app converts money at the mid-market rate that banks offer big customers. It then matches a request for foreign currency with a request for an equivalent transfer in the opposite direction — someone who has that currency and looking for Canadian dollars.

"This is almost like the sharing economy in the financial sense, in that there are other people who need those currencies and we're just a tech platform that makes it move very efficiently," Käärman said.

CONTRACT TALKS

Canada Post still hopes to reach deal

Canada Post says talks with the union representing postal workers continue and it still hopes to negotiate a deal.

Spokesman Jon Hamilton says the company has not given the required 72 hours notice of a lockout, nor has the union given notice of any job action.

Both sides remain at the negotiating table and Hamilton says he hopes they can reach an agreement that is "affordable and reasonable."

Changes to employee pension plans have been a key sticking point in negotiations.

Canada Post made new contract proposals about a week ago, and the union presented a counter-offer on Friday.

That offer includes wage hikes and rejects Canada Post's plan that would have new employees get a pension plan that operates like an RRSP, called defined contribution, instead of the defined benefit plan for current employees that guarantees a set level of retirement benefits.

Halifax is your favourite Metro city!

Last week, on the occasion of our home and native land's 149th, we decided to settle once and for all which Metro city is the best in the nation. We asked prominent Canadians to extol their hometowns and then we invited you, the readers, to vote online. Here are the final results, adjusted on a per capita basis.

Edmonton craft culture is becoming self-made

URBAN PARADIS

Danielle Paradis

Edmonton loves to DIY.

We're a city that boasts DIY food crawls, a re-use centre, bike shops, local theatres and art collectives. And let's not forget The Royal Bison, a craft show at the Buttermere that many crafters organize their year around.

Increasingly, Alberta women who are artists, crafters and entrepreneurs are starting up their own organizations to do what they love, and to make Edmonton an even craftier place.

This weekend the Made Local Society opened its doors to Edmonton in the Oliver neighbourhood. The society was initiated by the Alberta Yarn Project, a little organization that promotes locally grown and spun yarn, and On the Spot Pop-ups.

And — maybe it's because it's summer — I think I am coming down with this DIY fever. I'm a longtime barely adequate knitter, and walking into clothing shops like Workhall that boast big loft spaces filled with raw fabric and machines has made me want to up my craft game.

When I mused on Twitter about Edmonton's strong DIY ethos, Edmonton writer Todd Babiuk chimed in to say, "For a long time, I think Edmontonians felt isolated. They had to make their own fun and solve their own problems."

Anna Davidson is on the (all female) board of directors for the Made Local Society. She thinks that this DIY culture is new to the city.

"I don't know that I would have characterized Edmonton as a DIY place as a kid when I was growing up," she says, "but definitely in the last five years I've noticed an upswing in people being like, 'I'm going to do this thing' and then they do it."

The Made Local Society came into existence very quickly after an announcement that the organization that previously held court at 10149-122 Street, the Creative Practices Institute, would be dissolving.

Fabric arts may be typically female, but it's no small business. While crafting springs from the cottage industry, entrepreneurs can earn big. Alicia Shaffer in the U.S. pulls in $80,000 a month on Etsy.

With the rise of sites like Pinterest, women crafters seem to have found the perfect space to mix passion with craft.

Knitting and crocheting are wonderfully social hobbies. They have a connection to community built into the craft, so it's not surprising to see places like the Made Local Society popping up with an almost ready-made client base. And it seems like a natural extension to offer artists spaces where people can come and go.

Davidson says that the society wants to be a community to people. "We really want to be collaborative, not competitive. The more we work together the more we're going to be building up together."

EU is both symptom and potential cure

Joel Blit
For Metro

In the aftermath of the Brexit, it is tempting to paint the leavers as xenophobes or racists. And while there are some unsavoury elements within the Brexit movement, it would be simplistic to ascribe the movement's success to widespread bigotry. Moreover, doing so would preclude us from understanding the discontent. The leavers are right to feel aggrieved.

Economic integration has been sold as a rising tide that lifts all boats. In my undergraduate international trade course, one of the first lessons is that there are gains from trade for all countries. But what often gets overlooked is that within each country there are winners and losers. The reality is that while trade has brought many of the anticipated rewards, these have not been shared. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development reports that between 1975 and 2012 much of the income growth generated has gone to the one per cent of earners.

In the U.S., 47 per cent of the entire pre-tax income growth was captured by the one per cent. For Canada, this fraction was also large, at 37 per cent.

The major cause that most economists would point to is technological change. Software and robots are taking over routine jobs. And as the $19-billion US acquisition of 55-employee WhatsApp showed us, technology has also allowed the creation of firms that generate massive value for the investors and entrepreneurs while creating precious few jobs.

What is certain is that immigration has played at most a minor role in increasing inequality. Blaming immigrants for the low wages and lack of jobs is misguided.

Unless we are willing to halt technological progress, increasing income inequality may be a reality that we will have to cope with. This does not mean we have to accept that the rich will get richer while the poor will get poorer.

The implicit bargain is that for us to collectively agree to trade liberalization, those who benefit must share some of their gains with those who get hurt. Governments can ensure a good quality of life for all by implementing redistributive policies and offering quality public services, such as education and health care. Doing so will require that governments tax corporations and the very rich. But this is difficult for any one country because these groups are the most internationally mobile. As the Panama papers showed us, it is all too easy for the rich to set up offshore investments and avoid paying taxes.

Tackling inequality will require international co-operation and governance — just the sort of political integration that is best modelled by the EU, the very thing that the disenchanted voted to leave.

The leavers are right to feel aggrieved. But their anger at the EU is misplaced. Exiting will only weaken the one institution that offers a model for fighting inequality.

RESEARCH

Screening strategy helps identify new melanomas

Genna Buck
Metro Canada

Kathy Barnard's husband gives her an unusual, but sexy, gift each Valentine's Day.

He checks all her skin, from head to toe — for abnormal moles, that is.

As a survivor of melanoma, the most dangerous kind of skin cancer, Barnard is at high risk of a recurrence.

And research shows her screening strategy works.

In a new study, published last week in the Journal of the American Medical Association (Dermatology), high-risk patients who had melanoma before and their partners were assigned either no special treatment or, instead, training on how to identify new cancers. They were followed up for two years, with dermatologist visits every four months.

The results were impressive.

Patients and their partners who got the training correctly identified more than 60 per cent of new melanomas (the remainder were diagnosed by doctors). On the flip side, participants in the group who got no training were not able to spot new melanomas on by doctors. If it's caught in the earlier stages, survival rates for mel-anoma are above 90 per cent. Most patients diagnosed with advanced melanoma, on the other hand, die of their disease within five years.

The extra education didn't seem to increase anxiety or encourage extra doctor visits, pointing to how programs like this, though the initial research is expensive, could save money in the long term.

ABC'S OF SCREENING

Patients were given a simple A-B-C-D-E scorecard to help them remember how to screen their loved one's skin.

Assess moles and be aware of any that fall under the 3) description in each of the following categories:

Border

- 1) Smooth, regular border
- 2) Not sure
- 3) Jagged, irregular border

Colour

- 1) One or two colours, no blending
- 2) Not sure
- 3) Variety of colours with blending

Diameter

- 1) 4 mm or less
- 2) 5 mm
- 3) 6 mm or more

Evolution of any of the above

See your doctor within two weeks if any mole scores a 3) for B, C and D, or if there is any evolution at all in its border, size or colour.

The new research aimed to build on informal screenings people do at home, explained Dr. Jane Robinson, the lead author of the study.

She got the idea years ago when she was getting ready to discharge a melanoma patient after he had surgery to remove a cancerous mole on his back.

"I was explaining to this about-50-year-old man that he could develop another cancer, and telling him he had to check," Robinson said.

"I'll never forget it. He looked at me and said, 'Doc, my wife takes care of all that stuff!'"

"I said 'Where's your wife? Go get her! So he runs out the door with his shirt hanging out and brings in his wife from the waiting room."

Robinson taught the man's wife the warning signs to look for, especially in hard-to-see areas like his ears, back and the top of his head.

"She is all over it. Poking him, and questioning me so she could get it right," Robinson said. "It was out of love, to make sure he lived a long time."

In fact, Robinson added, partners who say they aren't particularly well bonded and don't spend much time together still succeed at identifying each other's cancers. Some even told her the screening ritual brought them closer together.

"People had a job to do," Robinson said. "They knew it was, 'Do this or the person could die.'"

Be in a great new career in less than a year.

Actresses say size shouldn't matter

Some stars find it hard to get designer duds for events

Ghostbusters star Leslie Jones' recent online lament about having trouble finding a designer to dress her for the film's premiere points to the challenges actresses face when it comes to walking red carpets in style.

While one nice tux might carry a male actor through many a premiere, it's customary for female stars to show up in new attire for every photo opportunity, which makes finding fresh, fashion-forward outfits for such occasions a time-consuming task, especially for women larger than a size 2.

"It's so funny how there are no designers wanting to help me with a premiere dress for (a) movie," wrote Jones, who is six feet tall. "Hmmm that will change and I remember everything."

But for designers, it's not just about their star clients fitting into smaller sizes, said celebrity stylist Nina Hallworth. It also has to do with creating a mutually beneficial partnership between the clothier and the star.

"It is about how a designer wants to be represented as an artist," Hallworth said in an interview. "We have worked with women who are sample sizes and incredibly well known and a designer will say no to that collaboration as creatively it is not a fit — even if we think it is."

As it turned out, designer Christian Siriano responded to Jones' call on Twitter last week and agreed to make her gown.

"I can't wait to create something special for her to wear," the statement said. "I support all women no matter age or size!"

"It shouldn't be exceptional to work with brilliant people just because they're not sample size," Siriano wrote on Twitter. "Congrats aren't in order, a change is."

He followed up later in the week with photos of Jones visiting his studio, where she said they are "making magic."

It's not clear how long Jones had been seeking a dress for the premiere, but she hasn't been alone.

Other actresses outside the size-2 landscape have said it can be hard to find designers to work with, even for high-profile events. Melissa McCarthy said that when she was invited to the Oscars after the success of Bridesmaids, she couldn't find anyone to make her a dress.

"I asked five or six designers — very high-level ones who make lots of dresses for people — and they all said no," she told Redbook magazine in 2014.

"Collaboration between designers and actors is symbiotic," Hallworth said. "A great image can last a lifetime; a bad one longer."

The term softboy was coined by Alan Hanson in a Medium article last August. It's a man who portrays himself as a complicated being with feelings but who is ultimately selfish. "He discusses his ex-girlfriend within the first 30 minutes of the date. He talks about her in a sad, wistful way rather than a snarky, resentful way ... He is artistic. He is aware. He is still a d---," writes Hanson.

Benching, as described by Jason Chen in New York Magazine, is when the person you're seeing continues to text you, Snapchat with you and send you memes on Instagram, but no longer commits to seeing you in person.

Haunting is when someone who ghosted you returns in the form of social media interactions — without being in touch directly with words. They like your Facebook posts and view your Snapchat stories, but unlike benching they don't get in touch directly.

Sliding is a form of social media flirtation that happens when someone you don't really know sends you a personal message on social media. They "slide into your DMs (direct messages)." It's an action that is usually a little precocious, if not abrupt. It usually happens before you've indicated any interest.

Fall and winter are considered cuffing season, a time when people who would usually prefer being single all of a sudden dread the idea of being alone.

Tuning is flirting (usually online) in a way that skirts the possibility of being rejected and may lead to a booty call (or text). The person sends signals in the form of Instagram or Facebook likes, Snapchats and text messages. Once there's been a back and forth, validating interest, a direct message could follow.

Ex-MVP makes Golden State's star-studded cast brighter

Kevin Durant decided his best chance for "growth" means leaving his beloved Oklahoma City behind for a big move out West to join the star-studded, record-setting Golden State Warriors and play alongside Splash Brothers Stephen Curry and Klay Thompson.

In the most anticipated move of the NBA off-season, Durant announced his decision Monday on The Players' Tribune. His contract is for $54 million over two years and includes a player option, a person with knowledge of the deal said Monday, speaking on condition of anonymity because details weren't made public. Durant's move will become official as soon as Thursday, when free agents can sign their new contracts.

Independence Day, indeed. "The primary mandate I had for myself in making this decision was to have it based on the potential for my growth as a player — as that has always steered me in the right direction," Durant said in the article. "But I am also at a point in my life where it is of equal importance to find an opportunity that encourages my evolution as a man: moving out of my comfort zone to a new city and community which offers the greatest potential for my contribution and personal growth. With this in mind, I have decided that I am going to join the Golden State Warriors."

And the 2015 champion Warriors, who squandered a 3-1 NBA Finals lead to lose to LeBron James and the Cavaliers last month, know how tough Durant is in any lineup: they rallied from down 3-1 to beat Durant and the Thunder in a seven-game Western Conference final.

Golden State applied a full-court press to land Durant. On Friday in the Hamptons, the Warriors sent owner Joe Lacob, general manager Bob Myers, coach of the year Steve Kerr, Curry and Thompson to meet with the six-foot-nine superstar.

Durant met with the Thunder, Warriors, Los Angeles Clippers, Boston Celtics, San Antonio Spurs and Miami Heat once teams could begin negotiating with free agents.

NBA IN BRIEF

Gasol, Spurs agree on deal

The San Antonio Spurs didn't waste any time after losing out in the Kevin Durant sweepstakes.

The Spurs agreed to a two-year deal with veteran forward Pau Gasol on Monday, a person with knowledge of the situation told The Associated Press.

The deal is worth more than $30 million and final terms will be completed after the Spurs make a move or two to create the necessary cap space.

Heat offer Wade $40M

Dwyane Wade has an offer to consider.

Wade has been extended a two-year, $40 million contract offer to stay with the Miami Heat, a person with knowledge of the negotiations told The Associated Press on Monday. The second year would be at Wade's option.

Mavs look to capitalize on Warriors' salary-cap issues

Andrew Bogut is headed to the Dallas Mavericks from Golden State thanks to the Warriors' successful pursuit of Kevin Durant.

A person with knowledge of the deal said Monday that the Mavericks have agreed to acquire Bogut with the Warriors trying to clear salary-cap space. The person also said the Mavericks are set to sign Harrison Barnes, who will become an unrestricted free agent after Golden State renounces his rights.

Carter banned for bumping Campbell

The CFL has suspended Montreal Alouettes receiver Duron Carter one game for his part in a wild melee in a game on Friday against the Ottawa Redblacks.

Carter was hammered as he made a spectacular catch in the end zone in the third quarter. As he walked by the Ottawa bench, he bumped into head coach Rick Campbell, knocking him over.

The Redblacks rushed to Campbell's defence, throwing slaps and shots at Carter, who continued his celebration straight through the Ottawa bench area to his own bench.

Carter and Ottawa defensive back Jerrell Gavins were ejected from the game.

The Alouettes fined Carter for the incident on Friday.

"To tell the truth, I don't even know what happened," Carter said after the game. "I ran into the coach, apparently."

"I didn't even know I knocked him over. It's an emotional game. I'm excited. I got hit. I got a cut on my face from that hit. You tell me."

The Redblacks won 28-13 to improve to 2-0 this season.

Canada names its Rio sailing team

Dannie Boyd already knew she was going to represent Canada at Rio.

The 26-year-old from Kingston, Ont., and 27-year-old Halifax crewmate Erin Rafuse earned an Olympic berth for Canada in the women's 49er FX class last November at the world championships in Buenos Aires.

They were nominated for the Canadian team at the beginning of March and haven't stopped their never-ending quest to go faster on the water.

Still the official announcement of Canada's sailing team was welcome news — yet another step forward in her Olympic dream.

"It's a good Monday," Boyd said with a laugh.

Boyd and Rafuse will be sailing in a boat named Maple in the 49er FX class, which has been in the Olympics for men since 2000 but it is making its Games debut for women.

Boyd and Rafuse are part of a nine-athlete Canadian sailing team that includes Nikola Girke, a veteran of three Olympics already.

Brothers Jacob and Graeme Saunders from Chester, N.S., will race in the 470 class.

Stage 3 heats up with photo finish

Hardly pedaling, the overall leaders in the Tour de France spent most of Monday's third stage chatting to one another and riding at such a leisurely pace that they could have fit right in on a town bike path.

"It was a very relaxed day for us. We went slow. It was nice," said Sagan, who playfully bumped shoulders with some of the other riders just to keep things interesting. "I was thinking one moment we were going to take the coffee like old time."

That was when Mark Cavendish showed off his sprinting experience by edging German rival Andre Greipel in a photo finish.

Having also won Saturday's opening stage at Utah Beach, it was Cavendish's second victory in this Tour and 28th overall. ### EURO 2016 SEMIFINAL SETUP

Madrid stars 'friendship will have to wait' till after match

When Portugal and Wales face off for a spot in the final of the European Championship, two players will be expected to rise far above the rest.

Cristiano Ronaldo and Gareth Bale, club teammates at Real Madrid and the most expensive players in the history of the sport, will bear the hopes of their nations on Wednesday night at Stade de Lyon.

None of the matches played at Euro 2016 has pitted two players of such unequaled star status.

The stage, fittingly enough, could hardly be bigger. The winner will earn a spot in the July 10 final at Saint-Denis against either world champion Germany or host France.

"Two of the best players on the planet," Wales coach Chris Coleman said. "I don't suppose there will be any love lost on the evening. We know what's at stake, any friendship will have to wait until after the game."

Less than six weeks ago, Ronaldo and Bale joined in celebrations after winning a second Champions League trophy in their three seasons together at Real Madrid.

Since moving to Spain on a record 100-million euro transfer that broke Madrid's own deal for Ronaldo, Bale has always played the role of deferential sidekick.

The match in Lyon offers Bale the stage to challenge that hierarchy.

He arrives in better form than Ronaldo. The Wales winger has three goals (only France's Antoine Griezmann has more with four), including two from free kicks.

Wales is also riding a huge high after the most important victory in its history: a 3-1 comeback to oust Belgium in the quarter-finals.

It means that Wales has taken the label of underdog fan favourite from Iceland after its fairy-tale run was ended by France on Sunday.

Ranked outside the top 100 four years ago, Bale scored seven goals in qualifying to carry Wales into its first major competition since the 1958 World Cup. Once in France, it defied expectations by finishing ahead of England to win its group. It then topped that by becoming the first debutante to reach the semifinals since Sweden in 1992.

And Wales has made its run in style. With Bale leading the way, it is second only to France with 10 goals scored and joins the hosts as the only teams to have won four matches outright, not counting wins from shootouts.

Portugal, by contrast, has clawed its way into its fourth semifinal in the last five tournaments. Having squeezed into the last 16 after three draws at the group stage, it needed a win in extra time against Croatia and then penalties to get past Poland.

Across its five matches, Portugal has been in the lead for a total of only 22 minutes and Ronaldo's two goals against Hungary are his only two strikes at the tournament. While Bale leads all players with 13 shots on target, Ronaldo has the inglorious statistic of a competition-high 14 shots off the mark.

"If Cristiano Ronaldo doesn't score, it doesn't mean he isn't playing well and doing other things," Portugal coach Fernando Santos said in defence of his forward. "Cristiano Ronaldo is an example as captain of this side. He's doing a great job. He wants to win."

+ TOURNEY NOTES

Less Pepe in their step?

Portugal defender Pepe is an injury concern for the semifinal against Wales with a thigh problem.

Khedira latest German player to fall to injury

Germany midfielder Sami Khedira has been ruled out of Thursday's semifinal against France with a groin injury.

Ref should be welcome sight to world champions

UEFA has appointed World Cup final referee Nicola Rizzoli to the Germany vs. France semifinal in Marseille.

The Italian referee, who officiated Germany's title-winning victory over Argentina two years ago in Brazil, will be working his fourth match at Euro 2016.

Del Bosque steps down

Vicente del Bosque, the coach behind Spain's glorious run of three major titles, confirmed on Monday that he is stepping down following the team's failed attempt to retain its European crown.

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

You'll want to spread this garlic-y topping on just about everything.

Ready in
Prep time: 5 minutes
Cook time: 15 minutes

Ingredients

- 2 cloves garlic, peeled and quartered
- 2 cups baby spinach
- 1 cup basil leaves
- 1/2 cup finely grated Parmesan
- 1/2 cup olive oil
- 1/2 tsp salt
- 1/4 tsp pepper
- 1 large store bought flatbread
- 1 Tbsp olive oil
- 1 cup ricotta cheese
- 1/2 cup shaved Asiago cheese
- 1/4 cup chopped sun-dried tomatoes
- Chopped basil for garnish

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 375 C. Prepare a baking sheet with parchment paper. In a food processor, mince garlic, then add the spinach, basil, Parmesan, oil and salt and pepper. Purée until smooth.

2. Lay the flatbread on the prepared baking sheet. Sprinkle with a bit of olive oil. Spread the pesto across the top of the flatbread leaving a 1/2-inch border around the edges. Drop heaping tablespoons of the ricotta onto the pesto. Sprinkle with Asiago and sun-dried tomatoes

3. Bake for 8 to 10 minutes, or until the edges of the crust are golden brown and the cheese is melted. Remove from the oven and sprinkle with chopped basil and slice into triangles to serve.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is a good day for family discussions, because you are sensitive to what others want to say. Trust your intuition, especially in discussions regarding home repairs.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
This is a fantasy-filled, imaginative day. You might spend time day-dreaming; however, you will see new ways to accomplish something you want to do in the future.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
If shopping today, you might want to make extravagant, luxurious purchases. Make sure you can distinguish between wants and needs.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Today Mercury is in your sign dancing with Neptune. This stimulates your creative imagination and makes you sensitive to the world around you.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Today you might be interested in hidden truths, spiritual mysteries and the paranormal. You want to know the reason behind why things happen.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
A discussion with a friend or a member of a group will be mutually sympathetic today. This person is grateful that you understand where he or she is coming from.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
In discussions with bosses, parents and VIPs today, you will be sensitive to the demands of their job and challenges. If you can help, you will.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Mystical and spiritual subjects fascinate you today. This is a good day to explore religion, poetry, music and occult subjects, because your mind is open to the unusual.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
If you divide or share something today, make sure you are fair to yourself as well as to others. You have an impulse today to be generous to those who are less fortunate.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
This is a good day for a heart-to-heart discussion with a close friend or partner. You will find it easy to see what this person wants or to imagine how he or she feels.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You will be bored with menial, routine tasks, because you want to discuss big concepts and ideas at work. Expect to be sympathetic to a co-worker.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Your creative vibes are hot today. This is a good day to explore music, the arts, theater, painting, drawing and anything where you can tap into your imagination.
